F O R E W O R D

The data in this report give a simple description of the Ontario collective agreements in industries other than construction that will expire in 1968. The report shows where and when much of the bargaining activity in the province will occur during the year.

The data were collected and assembled by Agnes Gesing from sources available in the Collective Agreements Library of the Ontario Department of Labour. She was assisted by Michael Prendergast and other members of the Research Branch staff. The work was done under the general supervision of Lenard Haywood, who took the major responsibility for preparing the final tables and text.

INTRODUCTION

At the beginning of 1968, the Ontario Department of Labour had on file 2,485 collective agreements that are scheduled for renewal during the year. They make up about 40 per cent of more than 6,000 current union contracts that are held in the Department's Collective Agreements Library and that apply to employees in Ontario. Of the 2,485 agreements expiring, 473 are in construction and 2,012 (covering 274,000 employees), are in other industries, mainly manufacturing.

The purpose of this report is to make information available on the extent of bargaining activity that is likely to result from Ontario agreements terminating in industries other than construction during 1968. In addition, it shows in what months and in what industries the activity will be concentrated. The information is presented in four tables that are described in the following paragraphs.

Table 1 gives a summary distribution by industry and expiry month of the agreement and employee data. It is presented in two parts; in Part A the data refer to agreements and in Part B to employees. It gives users of the report quick answers to such questions as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year? The table refers to 2,012 agreements and 274,000 employees.

Table 2 lists 1,947 agreements by expiry month and alphabetically by company name within that month. It also identifies the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage and location of each agreement. The first three items - industry, union and bargaining unit, are coded in the table, and the codes are defined below.

Table 3 arranges the same 1,947 agreements by broad industry groups and alphabetically by expiry month within these. The class codes appearing in each group are shown against the group name. In addition, Table 3 gives all the other information contained in Table 2.

Of the 2,012 expiring agreements in industries other than construction, 65 were received too late to be reported in Tables 2 and 3. However, they are included in the data in Table 1, and are listed alphabetically by expiry month in Table 4.

The terms, codes and data used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:-

- In Tables 2, 3 and 4, each agreement is identified by company or employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one- or two-word description of the operation or bargaining unit to which they apply. Also, the term 'Inter-city' is used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.
- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the "Standard Industrial Classification Manual" published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the division, major group and class or specific industry levels established by the Manual. The industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C.' in Tables 2 and 4. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer covered by the agreement. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages 7 to 11.

- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2, 3 and 4. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages 11 and 12.
- The term 'Unit' used in the table headings refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The codes are '1', '2', '3' and '4'. Where more than one code is shown, the agreement covers more than one type of unit. The codes are defined as follows:-

'1'. Plant Employees: Includes employees engaged in non-office functions such as fabricating, processing, assembling, inspection, receiving, storage, handling, packing, warehousing, shipping, maintenance, repair, janitorial and watchmen services, auxiliary production for plant's own use, record keeping and other services closely associated with the above operations.

'2'. Office Clerical and/or Technical Employees: Includes draftsmen and laboratory employees, as well as all others normally designated as office workers.

'3'. Sales Employees: Refers to employees who sell goods and services to other business organizations and to the consumer. Includes mainly sales clerks in variety, specialty, department and grocery stores.

'4'. Professional Employees: Includes nurses, fire fighters, policemen, newspaper reporters and editors.

- The table heading 'Number of Employees' indicates the number in the bargaining unit covered by the agreements. About 60 per cent of this data was obtained during the past twelve months from the companies or unions mentioned, and the remainder was obtained from surveys, none of which pre-dated May, 1966.

ONTARIO COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT
EXPIRATIONS

by
Research Branch
Ontario Department of Labour
December, 1968

Hon. Dalton Bales, Q.C.,
Minister

T. M. Eberlee,
Deputy Minister

F O R E W O R D

This is the Department of Labour's second annual report on collective agreement expirations in Ontario. The 1969 report has been expanded over last year's by adding two tables that show expirations by union and economic region for industries other than construction, and by presenting data on the construction industry for the first time. As a result, the report gives a substantially complete picture of the bargaining activity that will arise in the Province during the year from agreement terminations.

The report was prepared by Agnes Gesing from contracts held in the Department's Collective Agreements Library. She was assisted by several other members of the Research Branch staff, and most extensively by Miss Diane LaCavera.

John Kinley,
Director, Research Branch.

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this report is to make information available on the extent of bargaining activity that is likely to occur in Ontario during 1969 due to the expiration of collective agreements. The report is based on contracts held in the Department's Collective Agreements Library as of November 30, 1968.

The number of agreements that will terminate during 1969 is 3,583. Of these, 1,546 are in the construction industry, and the remaining 2,037 apply to forestry, mining, manufacturing, transportation and utilities, trade, finance, services, and public administration. The expiring agreements comprise about 48 per cent of the 7,500 current ones on file. This high proportion arises mainly from the situation in the construction industry where the number of agreements terminating is almost two-thirds of the total in the Province, and substantially more than three times the number of such agreements that terminated in 1968.

Because a few agreements that will expire in 1969 will continue to come to the Department's attention for the next two to three months, they could not be included in this report. Experience shows the number of late agreements will be approximately 200, and that they will cover relatively few employees. For that reason, the report gives an almost complete picture of the bargaining that will arise in 1969 from situations other than those brought about by newly-certified bargaining units or voluntary recognition.

The number of employees affected by the expiring agreements is shown only for industries other than construction. The total under these 2,037 agreements is 218,500 workers, of which 156,000 are in manufacturing establishments, and 62,500 are in forestry, mining, transportation, trade, service, and related activities. The number of employees covered by construction agreements is not yet available in the Department's records.

The tables are designed to highlight the concentration of agreement expirations by month, industry, union, and geographic area. In addition, the tables specify individual employers, numbers of employees, and the types of bargaining units to which the agreements apply. The data is presented in eight tables; five of these are in Part I of the report pertaining to industries other than construction, and three in Part II which deals with construction agreements.

The immediately following paragraphs give a brief introduction to the tables.

Table 1 is a summary statement of the data for industries other than construction presented by month and industry. It is in two sections; Section A referring to agreements, and Section B to employees. The table gives users of the report quick answers to general questions such as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year?

Table 2 lists the agreements expiring in 1969 by month and alphabetically by employer name within each month. In addition, it shows the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage, and location of each agreement. Three of these items - industry, union, and bargaining unit - are identified by codes defined later in this introduction.

This table differs from the one presented in the 1968 report on expirations in that agreements covering fewer than 25 employees are not shown individually. The total of these, including the number of employees they cover, is reported as the final entry for each month. For the full year, the total of such agreements is 943, and they cover 8,460 workers. These numbers represent approximately 47 per cent of all non-construction agreements expiring, but only about four per cent of the total number of employees covered by these agreements.

Table 3 shows the expiring agreements classified into the Major Industry Groups of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and arranged alphabetically by month of expiry within these groups. The table gives all the information mentioned in the paragraphs above describing Table 2, and agreements covering fewer than 25 employees are reported as the final entry under each Major Group heading of the SIC code.

Tables 4 and 5 give information that was not provided for 1968. Table 4 is a simple listing of the number of agreements and employees by union and industry. Table 5 is a breakdown of the same information for the major economic regions of Ontario and the principal industries within them.

Part II of the report provides information on agreement expirations in the construction industry. As already pointed out, a total of more than 1,500 such agreements will terminate in 1969, but information is given in only 107 of them. These agreements are between the various construction unions and the major contractors or associations of contractors for specified geographical areas. Most of the remaining agreements in this industry reflect the conditions set out in the relatively small number of contracts analyzed. The data is presented alphabetically by contractor or groups of contractors in Table 6, by economic region in Table 7, and by union in Table 8.

The terms, codes and data used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:-

- In Tables 2, 3, 6, and 7 each agreement is identified by company or employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one- or two-word description of the operation or bargaining unit to which they apply. Also, the term 'Inter-city' is used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.

- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the "Standard Industrial Classification Manual" published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the division, major group and class of industry established by the Manual. In Table 2 the industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C.'. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer covered by the agreement. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages 9 to 12. In other tables the industry is identified by the title used in the Manual.
- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2 and 3 and by name in others where such information is presented. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages 12 and 13.
- The term 'Unit' used in the table headings refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The codes are '1', '2', '3', and '4'. Where more than one code is shown, the agreement covers more than one type of unit. The codes are identified as follows:
  - '1'. Plant Employees: Includes employees engaged in non-office functions such as fabricating, processing, assembling, inspection, receiving, storage, handling, packing, warehousing, shipping, maintenance, repair, janitorial and watchman services, auxiliary production for plant's own use, record keeping and other services closely associated with the above operations.

- '2'. Office, Clerical and/or Technical Employees: Includes draftsmen and laboratory employees, as well as all others normally designated as office workers.
  - '3'. Sales Employees: Refers to employees who sell goods and services to other business organizations and to the consumer. Includes mainly sales clerks in variety, specialty, department and grocery stores.
  - '4'. Professional Employees: Includes nurses, fire fighters, policemen, newspaper reporters and editors, and airline flight attendants.
- Wherever it occurs, the table heading "number of employees" indicates the number in the bargaining unit. About 80 per cent of this employee data was obtained either from employers or unions at the time the agreement was filed with the library. The remaining 20 per cent was collected during the preparation of this report.

FOREWORD

The most important new feature of the Labour Department's 1970 report on collective agreement expirations is the addition of a table that presents the data by bargaining unit size. In other respects the analysis of the data is substantially the same as in the 1969 edition.

For the first time a computer was used in compiling the tables, and this has resulted in some changes in coding and table format. Important among these is the presentation of the data by economic region and urban centre in separate tables rather than in one. In addition, to cut costs, several tables were reproduced directly from computer print-outs.

The report was prepared from records maintained in the Department's Collective Agreements Library. The greater part of the planning and supervisory work was done by Agnes Gesing, head of this Library. Many members of the Research, and Systems and A.D.P. Branches of the Department participated in the preparation of the data, but a major share of this work was done by Cynthia Richards of the Library staff. The report was printed by the Office Services Branch.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes the extent of bargaining likely to arise in Ontario during 1970 from the termination of collective agreements. It is based on information available in the records of the Department's Collective Agreements Library as of November 30, 1969.

The records show that 3,300 agreements will terminate in Ontario during 1970; of these 1,021 are in the construction industry and the remaining 2,279 apply to bargaining units in forestry, mining, manufacturing, transportation and utilities, trade, finance, services, and public administration. The expiring agreements comprise about 40 per cent of the 8,380 current bargaining situations recorded by the Library.

The report gives a substantially complete picture of the bargaining that will occur in Ontario during 1970 except for situations that will result from certification and voluntary recognition. A few agreements that will expire in 1970, could not be included in the report because settlements had not been reached when data collection was completed. Experience shows that approximately 300 such agreements will come to the Department's attention during the next few months and that most of them will cover relatively few employees. Thirty-eight of these late agreements were obtained by the Library during December and are listed in an Appendix appearing on pages 204 and 205 of this document. Supplementary lists will be compiled by the Library during the year and will be made available on request.

The number of employees affected by expiring agreements is shown only for industries other than construction. A total of 354,696 employees are affected by the 2,279 non-construction agreements. Of these employees, 208,479 are in manufacturing establishments, and 146,217 in forestry, mining, transportation and utilities, trade, finance, services, and public administration. The large number of employees in the non-manufacturing industries arises mainly from the situation in the Transportation, Communication and Other Utilities Division, where a relatively small number of expiring agreements (196) cover larger than average bargaining units and account for 67,686 of the employees.

The number of employees covered by the expiring construction agreements is not reported as it is not yet available in the Department's records.

The body of the report is comprised of eleven tables. Eight of these are in Part I and present data on agreements pertaining to industries other than construction; the remaining three in Part II refer to the construction industry. The data, which are mainly in terms of numbers of agreements and numbers of employees, are presented in such a way as to highlight the concentration of agreement expirations by month, industry, union, geographic area, and bargaining unit size. In addition, some tables specify individual employers and the types of bargaining units to which the agreements apply. A brief description of each of the tables is given in the following paragraphs.

TABLES - INDUSTRIES OTHER THAN CONSTRUCTION

Table 1 is a summary statement of the data presented by month and industry. It is in two sections - Section A referring to agreements, and Section B to employees. The Table gives users of the report quick answers to general questions, such as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year? Also, the Table shows the percentage distribution of the total number of agreements expiring and the number of employees affected by industry and month.

Table 2 lists the expiring agreements alphabetically by employer name for each month of 1970. In addition, it shows the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage, and location of each agreement. Three of these items - industry, union, and bargaining unit - are identified by codes defined later in this Introduction. The Table differs from the comparable one presented in the 1969 report on expirations by listing individual agreements covering fewer than 25 employees, whereas in the earlier study only the total numbers of such agreements and the employees covered by them were noted.

Table 3 shows the expiring agreements classified into the major industry groups of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and arranged alphabetically by month of expiry within these groups. The Table gives all the information mentioned in the paragraph above describing Table 2, except that agreements covering fewer than 25 employees are reported as a total in the final entry under each major group heading of the code. For the full year, the total of such agreements is 917, and they cover, 9,213 employees. These numbers represent approximately 40 per cent of all non-construction agreements expiring but only about 2.6 per cent of the total number of employees covered.

Table 4 lists 43 Treasury Board of Canada agreements expiring in 1970 by union and bargaining unit. These agreements are not included in the other tables comprising this Part because most are Canada-wide, and the number of employees they cover in Ontario was not available.

Table 5 is a simple listing by union and industry of the numbers of expiring agreements and employees they cover.

Table 6 presents the data on numbers of agreements and employees by industry and economic region of Ontario.

Table 7 is a distribution of expiring agreements by major urban centres in Ontario. Tables 6 and 7 show the percentage distributions that were not available for the comparable classifications of the data in the 1969 report.

Table 8 is entitled "Collective Bargaining Agreements Expiring in 1970, Distribution by Bargaining Unit Size and Industry", and gives information that was not provided in previous reports.

TABLES - CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Part II of the report provides information on agreement expirations in the construction industry. As already pointed out, a total of more than 1,000 such agreements will terminate in 1970. However, information is given in this report on only 109 construction agreements that are between the various unions and the industry and major contractors or associations of contractors. The data on the 109 agreements is presented alphabetically by employer or employer association in Table 9, by economic region in Table 10, and by union in Table 11.

DEFINITIONS AND CODES

The terms and codes used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:

- In Tables 2, 3, 9, and 10, and in the Appendix, each agreement is identified by employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one or two-word description of the operation or bargaining units to which they apply. Also, the terms 'Inter-City' or 'Inter-Region' are used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.
- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the Division, Major Group and Class of Industry established by the Manual. In Table 2 and in the Appendix, the industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C.'. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages 6 to 11. In other tables, the industry is identified by the actual title used in the Manual.
- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2 and 3, and in the Appendix, and by name in others where such identification is required. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages 12 and 13.
- Wherever it occurs, the table heading, 'Number of Employees' indicates the number in the bargaining unit. About 80 per cent of this employee data was obtained either from the employer or union at the time the agreement was filed with the Library. The remaining 20 per cent was collected during the preparation of this report.
- The term 'Unit' used in a table heading refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The unit codes and their definitions are given below:

Unit Code	Definition
1	Plant Employees: Includes employees engaged in non-office functions, such as fabricating, processing, assembling, inspection, receiving, storage, handling, packing, warehousing, shipping, maintenance, repair, janitorial and watchman services, auxiliary production for plant's own use, record keeping and other services closely associated with the above operations.
2	Office, Clerical and/or Technical Employees: Includes draftsmen and laboratory employees, as well as all others normally designated as office workers.
3	Sales Employees: Refers to employees who sell goods and services to other business organisations and to the consumer. Includes mainly sales clerks in variety, specialty, department and grocery stores.
4	Professional Employees: Includes nurses, fire fighters, policemen, newspaper reporters and editors, actors, airline pilots and navigators, and others.

6	Combination of 1 and 3.
7	Combination of 1 and 4.
8	Combination of 2 and 3.
